Standard Partisan Elections by our definition are single-member elections where party labels are printed on the ballot. They do not include: a) nonpartisan elections; b) multiple-member elections ("vote for 3"); c) elections where Libertarian had fusion with another party; d) elections where multiple candidates appeared with the same party label. The exception is Chad Ivery Perry in 2014, who ultimately beat two Democrats; e) elections where the Libertarian appeared with a non-Libertarian label (independent, etc.). Updated 3/3/2020.
